Manager Commentary

Historically, September has been one of the weakest months for equity markets and other risky asset classes. But the end of Q3 of this year turned out to be exceptional in the historical perspective – global equity markets showed the best performances in the past 18 months and credit premiums of most fixed income markets lowered. While fast growth of the prices of risky assets often involves an increase in the interest rates of sovereign bonds of industrialised countries, the interest levels of eurozone sovereign debt grew only minimally in September. The latter was caused by a clear message sent to the markets by the major central banks about continuing with a monetary policy that stimulates the economy.

Swedbank Pension Fund K1 performance in September was 0%, with YTD performance of 2.7%. Developments in September confirmed our near-term outlook – although the economic growth in large economies is slowing down compared to the first half of the year, a new recession can be avoided. In our neighbouring area, the Baltic countries, this primarily means that the recovery of economies and public finances from the 2008–2009 crisis gradually continues. In view of this we increased our positions in the Lithuanian government 4-year and 7-year euro denominated bonds in September.
