Manager Commentary

Swedbank Pension Fund K2 returned 0.4% in January.

Global equity markets started 2011 with a generally positive sentiment. Better than expected results of Q4 earnings season and relatively successful tapping of bond markets by Spain and Portugal were the main factors driving the markets. European (especially Spanish) banks were one of the best performing sectors in January, while themes and stocks related to emerging market exposure had a big set-back.

Euro strengthened against major currencies in January and most equity markets positions in the pension fund portfolio posted a modest positive return in euro terms. Only small positions in Latin America and Emerging Asia had a negative return. In fixed income space the euro yield curve was flattening after 3 months break – German government 2y yields were 50bp up over the month, while 10y yield posted a 20bp increase. After globally rising price pressures and first relatively strong verbal statements on inflation by the ECB, markets have started to discount a first base rate hike possibility by the second half of 2011.

At the beginning of January we entered a CEE government Eurobond market, which performed flat over the month (in the environment were most bond yields were up globally).

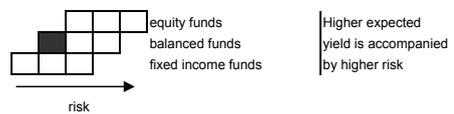

Going into February we have reduced our equity positions. We see 3 main short-term risk factors for the market: (i) central banks tightening liquidity, (ii) short-term market technical indicators are not favourable and (iii) oil price increase by over 5% in January has deteriorated a global business cycle outlook.
