Manager Commentary

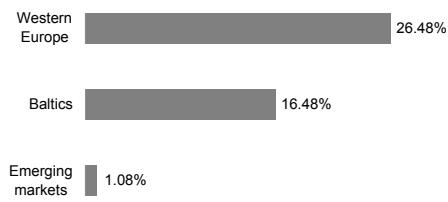

February was like a mirror image of the previous month in global equity markets – over the first week prices of most risky assets continued their downward trend which started in mid January, but by the end of the month price losses were mainly recovered. Also regionally, the best returning markets (Latin America, USA and Sweden) where the fund invests in were generally the ones with poor performance over January. In fixed income markets after a long time investment grade credit underperformed euro area periphery government bonds, in particular those of Greece and Ireland.

We gradually added equity positions toward the legally allowed maximum limits in the fund over February. In particular, we saw Europe and CEE equity markets as technically oversold in the short term horizon. Looking further ahead we expect global business cycle leading indicators to start rolling over. In addition, we see that the gradual withdrawal of liquidity from financial markets by major central banks can pose some temporary headwinds for global equities. As a result we stand ready to decrease our equity positions should the first signs of the aforementioned risks start to materialize.
